LOWEY BUNDY-SICHOL

LOWEY BUNDY-SICHOL is an award-winning children's author with an MBA from the Tuck School of Business at Dartmouth College. She is a pioneer in teaching entrepreneurship and business to kids, inspiring the next generation to think big and believe in their ideas.

Her book series From an Idea to... has earned literary accolades, including Best STEM Book by NSTA, Junior Library Guild Gold selection, International Literacy Association Book, and Texas Bluebonnet Award Master List. Lowey spends much of the year speaking at elementary schools around the country. She has been featured on The History Channel's The Toys that Built America, NBC, ABC, CBS, Fox, WGN-Radio, and many podcasts.

In addition to her books and author visits, Lowey creates innovative programs that help kids practice entrepreneurship and develop the skills necessary for success. Her website features free classroom activities, curriculum ideas, and links to her newsletter for kids called "Think Like an Entrepreneur." Lowey also partners with corporations to bring her author visits and books to Title I schools. To date, her community outreach efforts have impacted tens of thousands of children in Texas, New York, Illinois, and Massachusetts.

Lowey received an MBA from the Tuck School of Business at Dartmouth College and a BA from Hamilton College, where she played softball and rugby. Prior to writing children's books, Lowey worked in brand management and ran her own MBA case writing firm. She lives in the Chicagoland area with her husband and three kids.
